SEARCH FOR BODIES GUNNESS HOME

POLICE RANSACK FORMER RESIDENCE OF ALLEGED MURDERESS IN CHICAGO.

Mr. R. D. Smith and A. J. Hunt, two traveling men of Denver, who were on a train from Chicago to New York, noticed the woman board their sleeping car at Avon Lake. She was accompanied by another woman, and both were heavily veiled. When she reached her seat they got a look at her face and were struck by the resemblance between it and the figure in a picture of a woman who had been killed in the Pullman Hotel in Rochester by the alleged murderer. The woman was accompanied by the Rochester police and they, in turn, accompanied by the Chicago police, to the head of the train in this city.

SCORE OF BABIES SLAIN BY WOMAN?

CHICAGO, May 9.—Believing that Mrs. Gunness was on her way to Chicago, twelve bodies have been found, practiced her profession of assassination while she lived in Chicago, the police, under Assistant Chief Brandt and Counsel Hoffman, are now engaged in the yard and out of the house at No. 1141 Allen street, which Mrs. Gunness formerly occupied. The officers report that the bodies of a number of the woman's earlier victims, a report from an automatic alarm which the woman had placed in the house, and a number of other children, were found in the yard, which had the appearance of a slaughterhouse. The bodies were covered with blood, and some of the children were found with their heads broken. The bodies were found in the yard, which had the appearance of a slaughterhouse. Bodies Put to Rest.
That the bodies were found in a place where the bodies would be put to rest, is a fact which is not a secret. The bodies were found in the yard, which had the appearance of a slaughterhouse. The bodies were covered with blood, and some of the children were found with their heads broken. The bodies were found in the yard, which had the appearance of a slaughterhouse. CITIZENS SEND REQUEST FOR PROMOTION TO
WASHINGTON—FAREWELL TO OFFICERS.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 9.—All call today is today demanding that Planning Bob Evans be made a vice-admiral. The people on the Pacific seaboard for months lived in daily apprehension of a war with Japan, and they now have the greatest reverence for the famous sailor who brought the American armada around the Horn to protect the west coast, it is said. At the close of the banquet given to the city by the Secretary of the Navy and officers of the command, it was resolved to send the following telegram to congress, requesting that Admiral Evans be promoted to the rank of vice-admiral. The citizens of San Francisco, in appreciation of the services rendered by the late Admiral Evans, who brought the American armada around the Horn to protect the west coast, it is said. At the close of the banquet given to the city by the Secretary of the Navy and officers of the command, it was resolved to send the following telegram to congress, requesting that Admiral Evans be promoted to the rank of vice-admiral.

Today's Lesson in The
American's Course for Salespeople
Copyright, 1908, by American Journal Exchange

Every customer who comes to your counter has a lesson.

The "hard" customer to sell to is developing you in points that you can USE AGAIN TO ADVANTAGE when the same kind of a customer comes around again.

To a disagreeable customer always show the pleasantest side of your nature. And so on, day by day, you will find when closing time comes you have accomplished much in training yourself for a broader sphere of usefulness.

Sometimes—yes, often—the customer does not really want anything—every salesperson knows this type of "shopper." But they are at least entitled to the courtesy due a patron of the house, for if they do not buy to-day they may to-morrow and probably did yesterday.

Many a transaction that looked like a "lost sale" has been captured for the salesperson's book by just a little tact and keeping-at-it—not forcing the customer to buy something he or she does not want, but by coming to an understanding of the want and filling it.

It is here that salespersons show their value, gain confidence in themselves and are on the road to success.

Get out these "Lessons." Every Sunday or print a review and self-education. A good plan is to clip the lessons and review and paste them in a notebook. You will find there a manual on salesmanship that you could not buy for a good many dollars. It may be worth hundreds to you in increased sales.

Pretty Jennie Olsen, One of the Victims of Mrs. Gunness' "Bluebeard Castle"

Jennie Olsen was seventeen years old. She was the daughter of Anton Olsen of Chicago. Mrs. Gunness took charge of her when she was eight. The four children of the missing "murder broker" perished in the fire which destroyed the Mrs. Gunness home. A woman's body was also found in the ruins. The police declare that Mrs. Gunness evidently killed the children, placed another woman's body in the house to represent her and then burned the place to cover her own escape.

Kentucky Terrors Threaten to Morgan's Raid.

MANCHESTER, O., May 9.—Troop A of Cavalry is today patrolling the Ohio side of the Ohio river to prevent any invasion of Kentucky night riders. The feeling, however, against the raiding of troops in the Ohio river is very bitter. The people generally do not want the soldiers in their midst. The soldiers are not wanted in the Ohio river. Just a Word About "Honest Tom Hisgen"

FROM YESTERDAY'S NEW YORK AMERICAN

The Louisville Courier-Journal inquires, "Who is Thos. L. Hisgen?" And the Boston Globe promptly replies, "If the Courier-Journal does not know who Thos. L. Hisgen is, it is high time the Courier-Journal was finding out."

Whereupon the Globe, which is not particularly averse toward politics of any kind, but is supposedly Democratic, proceeds in fact and mainly tribute to inform the Kentucky inquirer that Mr. Hisgen, who as the recent formidable candidate of the Independence Party polled 6,000 more votes for Governor of Massachusetts than the Democratic candidate did, is known throughout that Commonwealth as "Honest Tom Hisgen," and that, as an independent oil dealer, he has fought the Standard Oil monopoly without fear or favor, and has steadily held his own against the octopus.

Here, then, we have in brief, and surely from an impartial and capable witness, a very remarkable tribute to one of the really great leaders of the new Independence Party.

Let the reader of the AMERICAN in any State look over the list of its business men, great and small, and see how many of them in this age of greed and graft have so lived and labored among their fellow men as to have won and worn for years the noble sobriquet of "Honest."

The title "Honest Tom Hisgen" is the supremest of tributes to the Massachusetts statesman and carries with it a suggestion of confidence and character which is the chief glory of the man and part of the riches of the great party which he has so ably and loyally represented. Such a title will commend him above all lighter praise to the good will of the people.

Let the reader of the AMERICAN think again and count how many men he may know in his own or other States who have successfully fought the Standard Oil monopoly in competition. The currents of business in nearly every State in the Union are strewn with the wrecks of business men who have dared to compete with the Rockefeller octopus in the sale of this standard commodity. The honest competitor has been strangled by a cutting of rates with which he could not compete. The monopoly has driven competition out of business in thousands of cities by this sheer, brutal exercise of its wealth and power and trampled independent effort remorselessly under foot.

But "Honest Tom Hisgen" of Massachusetts, in sturdy courage, in hard-headed common sense and in cool, conquering capacity, has refused to be strangled or trampled and stands almost alone among American oil men who have been bold and brainy enough to compete successfully with the giant monopoly of the republic.

There is good stuff of statesmanship and of public service in this stanch citizen of Massachusetts.

Courage and capacity are the qualities which the age demands.

And when these are supplemented by an honesty so signal as to be carried into an epithet by his fellow men it makes up a character rich in promise to the party and the country.

That "Let Us Alone" Slogan

Very Sententious and Striking—Just What Does It Mean?

Copyright, 1908, by American Journal Editors

One newspaper carries this slogan at the head of its editorial page in New York. One big and intelligent railroad man, B. F. Yoakum, is recognized as the father of the important phrase. Business men all over the country are echoing it. It will play a part in the coming national campaign undoubtedly.

"Let Us Alone" has a peculiarly brief, convincing, American ring to it. But before we all adopt the saying, before we hang it up framed in our dining rooms, or have it embroidered on our shirt sleeves, we ought to ask who is "US," and who is asked to let "US" alone?

This country at present is ruled by a few bosses and plutocrats combined. We should be very glad to see a few millions of citizens uniting and telling these self-elected rulers to "Let Us Alone."

But if the trusts robbing the people and the political bosses taking the trusts' orders raise their busy eyes to say "Let Us Alone," the case is quite different.

"Let Us Alone" is a motto that would suit admirably a great majority of the gentlemen in State prison.

"Let Us Alone" is breathed from the bottom of the heart of every collection of individuals planning some wholesale robbery, from every little group of footpads bending over an unconscious victim.

Thus far we decline to indorse the "Let Us Alone" slogan. There may be a few reputable citizens interested in it, but our general impression is that it is the heartfelt cry of big men busily engaged in big stealing, and very much annoyed at being interrupted, if only for a few moments.

Borrowing Joy

By Winifred Black

THE happiest woman I know is as black as the ace of spades. She's old and she's very poor, and she can't read or write. Every Monday morning she comes to my house to do the washing, and Monday is the great day of the week to me, just because there's a streak of lively sunshine down in my heart, and I can feel it all through the house. "What are you smiling about this morning?" said to the happiest woman I know a week or so ago. It was raining hard and she was wet almost to the skin. Her shoes were none too thick, and she had a little threadbare cape over her broad shoulders. "The somebody left you a fortune," she said. "Yes, dear, it sure is a mighty good cup of coffee 'n' a drinkin'! ain't nuthin' like a good, cold storm to make you relish your coffee." The next week I saw the happiest woman I know coming up on the back of a chair, smiling like a cherub. "Well, auntie, what is it that's so fine this morning?" I said. "Kind a warm, possible sort of day, ain't it?" said the happiest woman. "Ain't it?"

The Motto on the Coin—San Francisco's Glorious Lesson in Faith and Cheerfulness

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

A CURIOUS thing was shown me in the St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco, Cal., that wonderful city to such an astonishing degree, and which would build it up to be a far greater and more beautiful city than it has ever been in the past.

These same people who are showing this colossal courage no doubt used to make themselves miserable over trifles; over the loss of a small amount; over the incompetence of domestics; and the failure of tall tales to get a corner property doubtless caused them unwholesome quarrels "before the quake."

It sometimes seems that it is because so many of us waste life and emotion over the trifling worries of existence that the great calamities are sent now and then to wake the nobility in human nature, the real heroism which comes forth in times of universal disaster.

What a great and glorious world this might be if we always kept the attitude toward one another which prevails in the hour of flood and fire and earthquake!

Lesson in Brotherhood

If we forgot the foolish distinctions of classes, and just thought of one another as God's children, pushing forward to safety, all hungry for peace, all seeking shelter in the arms of Eternal Love.

And if our hearts were always wide open to the same emotions of sympathy and helpfulness that move in us at some crucial hour. Oh, the life of it that we wait for some colossal disaster to awaken in us the real spirit of universal love.

God, what a spirit, if men in stress and trouble, feel that common cause and feel that common fate!

There are no mean-spirited faces in San Francisco. There is no talk of hard luck and misfortune.

Men who have been accustomed to careworn and office occupations are turning their accomplishments into the music of the spheres.

Women who have been accustomed to domestic and servant and luxury are turning their accomplishments into the music of the spheres.
